A Sidelight of Joint Linkup Project

U.S. Discovers Russia Was Far Behind in Moon Race

WASHINGTON, June 9 (AP).-During the 1960s, the United States conducted a crash program to beat the Russians in putting a man on the moon. Now. U.S. space officials have evidence that the Soviet Union never was in the race and that it trails this nation by several years in manned space technology.

Their manned spaceship, the Soyuz, has less capability than the U.S. Gemini craft of a decade ago. It is almost totally controlled from the ground and could not make a lunar trip.

Soviet cosmonauts play much more passive roles than U.S. astronauts. They mainly go along for the ride. And Soviet rockets are far less powerful than those of the United States. These facts have come to light during discussions between U.S.

aud Russian experts who are planning a joint manned flight next year. In their desire to promote this venture, the Russians have revealed many of their space secrets. Such disclosure was necessary by both sides to assure there would be no hidden dangers when the Soyuz and an Apollo ship hook up in orbit.

Limited Purpose

U.S. officials do not downgrade the Soyuz; they say it is line for its purpose, which is for relatively brief orbital flights and for ferrying cosmonauts to a space station. But they were or 1968, we had enough informa-

• Once in orbit, the Soyuz will be mainly passive. The Apollo will be launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla. seven hours later and will conduct all maneuvers over a 24-hour period to eatch the Soyuz and move in for a linkup. U.S. tracking equipment will be placed aboard the Soyuz to help guide the Apollo.

Astronaut Eugene Cernan, who commanded the Apollo-17 moon landing and who now is a member of the team planning the U.S.-Russian flight, said: "Our Apollo spacecraft is far, far more sophisticated and has got a greater capability than their Soyuz, That doesn't say the Soyuz is not good. It was just built

EEC Urged Wine Rules By David Haworth

BRUSSELS, June 9 (IHT).— The recent detection in France and Italy of two large-scale wine manufacturing frauds has prompted the Executive Commission of the European Economic Community to put forward new proposals to control and protect wine standards. This initiative prompted by questions in the European Parliament, followe the discovery of a "wine laboratory" near Palermo, fully equipped for the production of substandard wine. This was the fourth such fraud to be discovered in southern Italy during the past three months. The police on this occasion found 500,000 liters of underfermented grape julce, the same quantity of hot water and seven tons of sugar.

Big Profits

Similar plots to adulterate wine have also been uncovered in Corsics, where three companies wera marketing as "wine" a drink made from wine lees, sugar, glycerine and sulphuric acid. The profits from this operation are alleged to have hit 60 million francs ($12 million).

Although the EEC authorities accept that wine frauds are common within the nine-member grouping, especially in France and Italy, it is unable to say how high the percentage of "artificial wine" is in the EEC's total wine production.

The Executive Commission has to rely on the competent authortrack such frauds down, having no law-enforcement arm of its chosen for it had backed out at own. But it is trying to get common methods of analysis or rules to detect infringements adopted by all of fits wine-producing members.

Fuel Shortages, Speed Curbs Tied To Road-Toll Dip

CHICAGO, June 9 (AP),-Lower fuel supplies and drlving speeds have cut the death toll on the nation's highways to its lowest level in years, according to the president of the National Safety Council.

"The life-saving trend in traffic accidents that appeared last winter at the onset of the energy crisis still seems to be with us." Vincent Tolany said recently.

Both the three-day Memorial Day weekend (May 25-27) and the first four mooths of 1974 were the safest in years. Mr. Tofacy sald.

The Memorial Day death toil was 394, the lowest in 14 years. For the first four months of 1974, there were 3.4 deaths per 100 million miles traveled, he "We believe the fuel shortage factors have played a large part in the reduction from a rate of 4.2 [deaths] last year," Mr. Tofany said.

He predicted that about 8.500 lives a year could be saved with 75 percent compliance with speed limits of 55 miles an hour.

FBI wiretaps had not provided any evidence of national security leaks but had picked up many items of personal information and private political beliefs. Such material was provided to the White House, the congressmen

Mr. Kissinger has stood by his Senate testimony despite such assertions and despite published reports that the edited transcripts White House tape recordings show that President Nixon said last year that "Henry asked that

After telling of the alleged presidential meeting authorizing the taps in May, 1969, Mr. Kissinger testified that his function had been limited to supplying lists of those with clearances and receiving "some" FBI reports on the wiretaps in existence.

Haldeman Took Charge

After May, 1970, Mr. Kissinger said, Mr. Haldeman assumed the dominant role, and Mr. Kissinzer's office was only occasionally in touch with William Sullivan, the bureau official in charge of the wiretaps.

However, the sources said, FBI documents show that Gen, Haig maintained close contact with Mr. Sullivan until Feb. 6, 1971. when he ordered the last eight taps turned off.

One closely involved official declared 1. a telephone interview that Gen. Haig had telephoned Mr. Sullivan and told him that the wiretaps had served their purpose" and should be shut

"Haig always made it clear that he was a messenger," the source added, "that he was relaying instructions."

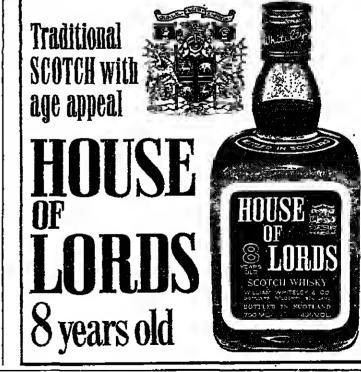

"If Henry didn't approve of all this, he could have said so," the official declared.

Cocaine Is Found In Baby's Crib

NEW YORK, June 9 (UPI) .-Police Friday arraigned a West German couple oo charges of attempting to smuggle cocainc with a street value of $1.4 million through Kennedy Airport In the crib of their 3-year-old daughter.

The couple, Hans Schneider and his wife, Almut, both 30, were picked up last night by customs inspectors as they transferred from a flight from La Pas, Bolivia, to another plane bound for Frankfurt, Federal authoritics alleged that the suspects had paid $6,000 for the 6.6 pounds of cocaine in Bollvia, Conflict Over Gold...

fronting representatives of the major financial powers at the final session of their monetary conference in Washington this week will be how to resolve the conflict between the United States and several European countries on the future role of gold.

The American position within the Committee of 20 of the International Monetary Fund bas been that gold should gradually be removed from the monetary system. The United States wants it replaced by a redcfined special drawing unit-sometimes dubhed "paper gold"—a managed international currency representing a "basket" of other currencies. What may be oversimplified as the European position is that gold still has a crucial role to play as a form of national monetary reserves-and, in fact, that it is now more urgent than ever to "remobilize" monetary gold since the energy crisis has deepened balance-of-payments deficits.

The Europeans contend that gold has been immobilized by the enormous gap that has developed between the official price of gold

One of the key issues that will be con- of $42.22 an ounce and the free-market price. which has been as high as $130 an ounce in the mldst of world monetary turmoil. The price has now slipped back to about $160.

The members of the European Economic Community reached agreement at a meeting io Zeist, the Netherlands, two months ago that they would press for an arrangement that would let their central banks exchange gold among themselves at a market-related price: they would also be free both to buy and to sell gold on the free market. The United States has no objection to other nations' selling gold on the free market. thereby reducing their gold stocks and making gold increasingly like any other commcdity. It does, however, object to central banks' buying gold from the market—a practice it contends would pave the way for a return to gold as the bedrock of the world monetary system. The United States considers that a managed international currency holos forth far greater hope for world trade and development, while allowing nations to manage their own economic affairs.

...And How to Resolve It

Despite its seeming complexity, the gold issue is not insoluble. Americans and Europeans should not find it hard to agree that the present official price of gold at $42.22 is meaningless and that it would be desirable for nations to be able to use their gold reeerves to cover deficits. Agreement should also he possible on the dangers, under present conditions of world inflation and floating exchange rates, of trying to tix a new official price for gold. On that basis, a foundation clearly can be established for willingness by both sides to agree to wipe out the official price altogether and let the price of gold be determined in the free market.

The sticking point, however, is whether central hanks should be free to buy as well as sell gold in the private market. Here the British have offered a compromise which would permit central-hank purchases from the market only to the extent that they did not result in any quantitative increase in monetary gold stocks. This compromise might meet the American objections to a return to gold-the fear that governments would rush to buy and set off another inflationary scramble for gold.

Many other ways could be found for achieving the same goal of safe and sane rules for remobilizing gold reserves at market-related prices. For instance, nations could use their gold reserves as collateral for loans among governments and thus avoid risking a return to heavy government gold nurchases from the private market. Devising a compromise on gold should not be heyond the ingenuity of finance ministers.

It is now urgent that such a compromise be found. In the world's present highly charged monetary atmosphere, the last thing needed is one more gold rush and flight

Beyond D-Day

Half of today's world was not yet horn when that first communique was issued by the Supreme Headquarters of the Allied Expeditionary Forces 30 years ago: "Under the command of General Eisenhower, Allied and the Rhine went on for nearly a year naval forces, supported by strong air forces. before D-Day turned into VE-Day, but the began landing Allied armies this morning on the northern coast of France."

Great events need no adjectives; but flery trials for men under arms in the service of liheration demand, if not celebration, recollection. The biggest armada in history crossed the English Channel; hrave men clambered up the beaches; parachutists fell from the skies: some remained forever young under the crosses behind the heachheads and in the memories of families and friends.

The risks were greeter from time and storm than from a dedicated enemy made up of mere mortals, not as the Third Reich boasted, supermen. The war across France marks of that time are still impressed on the bodies and minds of allies and foes.

Three decades after that D-Day, after many a rude war, the world has entered the age of the intercentinental ballistic missie. Mutual assured destruction-the scenario of madness-lies under the surface of the evergreater arms race. This is not the heritage his the horror that men must still fight against.

Chirac's Policy

"Continuity and change." How is candidate Giscard d'Estaing's electoral siogan being translaten into Prime minister Chirac's foreign policy program? . . . The change is detectable in the tone and the silences of Mr. Chirac's Assembly speech. He spoke of the United States with particular warmth. He notably underlined the ties that unite France to "the biggest economic power in the world"—an apparent indication that France in the future will strive to avoid the clashes on this ground that were so frequent in the recent past. But the most striking thing in his speech was the silence on specific problems. The quarrel over European-American consultations that monopolized the Qoal d'Orsay last year was not mentloned, nor was the European-Arab dialogue, one of the grand designs of French diplo-

Traveling Magician

The United States does not intend to oust the Soviet Union from the Middle East. Mr. Kissinger said in his press conference in Washington, Mr. Kissinger obviously is very pleased with "the events which have marked political life in certain European countries in recent months" . . . He welcomed "the more spontaneous atmosphere" which he detects in transatlantic consultations. Will this new atmosphere be enough to permit the "Atlantic declaration" - the first piliar of the "new charter" which he still wants to promote-to be signed in Ottawa at the next NATO ministerial meeting this month? He is not certain, but he hopes so.

Mr. Kissinger is thus expecting personally to contact "the new European leaders' as soon as possible. President Nixon, he said, also wishes to meet with them. Plans are heing considered concerning the leasibility of such meetings in the near future, but nothing so far has been settled with the governments concerned.

For the time being however, the US. President's travels to the Middle East next week, and to the Soviet Union later in the menth, have priority. While referring to both, Mr. Kissinger appeared primarily concerned with humoring the leaders in the Kremlin in order to create favorable conditions for the third Nixon-Brezhnev summilt. . . . He did not conceal the fact that his major concern remains the negotiation of the SALT II agreement. It is not certain, however that it will be possible to sign a formal agreement at the Moscow summit. Will there merely be a pure and simple reallifuation of the interim agreement? Mr. Kirsinger roles this on categorically buy did not want to say more on the matter. When Foreigners Do Vote

By C. L. Sulzberger

DARIS-Throughout most of by now know a good deal about America's history, foreign policy has played a relatively slight role in political debate on the grounds that "foreigners don't vote." Of course, when debate invoired soing to war, diplomatic affairs assumed far greater interest. But even then, as with ord he was compiling. Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt, there was a tendency to disguise the government's actual intentions until crucial bal-

Only in recent years has American diplomacy begun to be discussed with serious interest by the majority of the American people. This began in 1960 when Kennedy and Nixon argued about the Chinese offshore islands. As involvement in Vietnam increased. it intensified and emotionalized U.S. interest in Asia. Politicians began to study foreign affairs and take precise positions.

Now, in the middle of Nixon's second term, when everything else is disintegrating about him, his role as a world leader remains an important fact. He has done ecormous harm to the U.S. moral position, especially in Americans own minds, to the U.S. legal sense of validity and to the U.S. world image—as Americans imagine it. But in fact he has perhaps done as much to enhance America's real world position as anyone since

'No Trespassing'

Obviously, the bulk of Americans refuse to believe this. No U.S. president save Harding and Grant-not even Andrew Johnson-has smelled so bad. Lyndon Johnson orcasionally walked along the margin of "no trespassing" signs. Nor can we forget that Franklin Roosevelt surely bent the Constitution on the Issue of World War II: but it was his fervor, not his morality, that was

A World to Choose

To the Class of 1974

By James Reston

WASHINGTON. - Art Buchwald's lighthearted message to this year's college graduates was that "we've given you a perfect world, so don't louse it up." but most of the other commencement-day speakers seem to have been in a decidedly pessimistic mood.

We have lost our way, according to the common theme. Our insti-tutions have failed us, our leaders have lied to us and broken their trust. We have changed the world faster than we have been able to change ourselves. So, it seems, we are a "nation of strangers," without faith in the old religious values or even in ourselves.

There are other themes, of course, but Cassandra seems to be in the main pulpit, pointing to inflation, Watergate, Vietnam, easy eex. booze and dope as symhols of a greedy and declining

Well, there is some truth in all this and we may ask, with Archi-baid MacLeish, "Where has all the grandeur gone?" But this is only the dark side of the republic.

The Bright Side

The Constitution hasn't failed us-we're just hesitating to apply its spirit to the present scandals. Our institutions have not failed us-the courts, the Congress, the press and the church are meeting their responsibilities today more seriously and effectively than they have in many years.

Look at Judges Sirica and Gesell in Washingtoo if you think the idea of decency and justice (or even the instinct of nobility and grandeur) are dead in Amer-ica. Listen to the states, passing tough new laws to correct and control the scandals of campaign

In this sense Watergate is not killing us but may be saving us. It has revived the conscience and emboldened the spirit of the states, the Congress, the press and the church, and the reforming impulse of America is alive again. Practical remedies are now in train-not the ideals of perfectionists, not as much reform or progress as the times require, but still more reform and progress tban we have seen in Washington

In both the Vietnam and Mideast cases, moreover, there seems to have been some diplomatic cause. It is easy enough to understand, for instance, why Hanoi would have appreciated Kissinger's discreet assurance in 1973 that within a year the United States would withdraw its civilians "working in the armed forces' of Saigon, Kissinger's reluctance to pass this word to Saigon also makes sense.

Here one cannot help observing, however, that an undertaking made in private does not necessarily take on extra solemnity. In the cited instance, the United States has still not withdrawn all its civilians, "Our statement of intention to do so," a State Department spokesman said, "was in the context of [there being] substantial compliance by North Vietnam with the agreement: Unfortunately, this did not prove to be the case." -

. In defense of its Vietnam diplomacy, the State Department also pointed out that none of the secret understandings involved "add obligations on the part of the United States"-an "obligation" being defined as a commitment to increase rather than reduce the American role. The understandings made more recently in the Midesat seem different. There Kissinger, to induce Israel to accept the Syrian disengagement, made statements on future military supplies which led the Israeli premier, then Mrs. Meir, to tell her parliament that "the consistent aid of the United States to Israel has been assured for the future by the President of the United States." In yet another understanding

Moderates Stronger at Head of PLO

By Henry Tanner

CAIRO, June 9 (NYT),-The Palestine National Council ended a nine-day session here today by electing a new enlarged Executive Committee in which the moderates will be stronger than in the outgoing body.

The new executive-which in effect is the cabinet of the Palestine Liberation Organization—was enlarged to 14 members, including four independent moderate personalities recently expelled from the Israeli-occupied West Bank

At the same time, after beated debate a seat on the executive was given to a representative of an extremist splinter group headed by Ahmed Jibril. This group, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command carried out the April 11 attack on Kiryat Shemona in Israel io which 21 persons, including three terrorists, died.

The Jibril group until now was represented in the 150-member council, or parliament, but not in :- the executive

Meanwhile, the moderates around Mr. Arafat clearly fear that the resistance movement would lose its clout and bargaining power if the militant guerrillas left it.

The prevarious interplay be-tween the moderates and the extremists was evident from the texts adopted by the council.

Summed up the council in-structed the leaders to seek a change in the terms of reference of the Middle East peace talks to as to make the "national rights of the Palestinian people" a topic to be discussed. The council forebade the leadership to attend any conference based on the United Nations Security Council Resolution 242 of November, 1967, which refers to the "refugee problem" but not to the Palestinian national cause.

The phrase "national rights of the Palestinian people' means the right to set up a Palestiniau Jordan and in the Gaza Strip as a minimum.

TEL AVIV. June 9 (AP).--Defense Minister Shumon Peres today branded the PLO as the "most irresponsible organization in the Middle East," and said Israel would never negotiate with its leaders.

Mr. Peres accused the PLO of inviting "further and more dangerous Soviet influence" into the Arab-Iaraeli dispute.

Israel cannot negotiate with "an organization that does not seek compromise." Mr. Peres said. He claimed that the PLO did not represent the majority of the Palestinian people.

Jordan's King Hussein warns, to recognize the PLO (Pales as the Palestinians sole legal representative. Now where do you stand?

Answer-More to the point is where does the PLO stand? They haven't yet come up with a visble solution. Nor have the Arab states come up with any ideas. Three Arab nations lost territory to Israel in the 1967 war. We are one of them. I believe and assume it to be Jordan's responsibility to recover the West Bank. A little progress has been made on the Sinai and Golan fronts. In this initial phase of discugagement, I feel our turn must come next and I have submitted concrete proposal for an Israeli withdrawal to an average depth of six miles from the Jordan There is no response as yet but we are closely coordingting our position with Egypt. Syria and the U.S. Logically. only we can get the West Bank back—and our partners know this. After that it will be up to complete freedom and under international auspices, what they want: stay united with Jordan as ther were before go their own way or create an autonomous state that would be confederated or federated with the East Bank.

Question-(Israeli Premier Yitzhak) Rabin says be rejects the notion of a separate Palestinian state and will not negotiate with representatives of terrorist organizations." And if the other Arab states decide you cannot negotiate on behalf of the Palesmians, what is the way out? Answer-Any sensible person will agree that Israel has no right to decide who speaks for the Palestinians. Only the Pales-tinians should speak for themselves after all. Their right of self-determination is the basic issue. And I don't think the other Arab states will say we cannot negotiate for the return of the West Bank as they know that no one else can do it.

Question-What do you think of Rabin and his program? Do you see any hope of a new era in Arab-Israeli relations?

Answer-Well, for one thing a younger geoeratioo has come to power in Israel. At the beginning they will probably have to speak out from both sides of their mouths to avoid offending others. A clean break with the bankrupt policies of the past is perhaps too much to ask. But we hope they have the capability to see Israel in a different light. There is movement—and it's hopeful. With foresight and courage, it can lead to a just and durable peace. Question-Where and how do you see Israel in 10 years? Answer-It's up to them. Either they can continue on the same path and become another Rbodesia. They would eventually be destroyed. It would only be a matter of time, Dangers to world peace and stability would also be very real. Or they cao return the occupied territories and end

Question-But does Israel have n role to play in the area? Answer-Not before she returns to where she came from in the Question-If she does that, would the Arabs recognize her and establish oormal relations? Answer-That's bound to bappen. Israel would live normally in this area. But oot if they walt. The Arabs now have untold billions of dollars in oll revenue. Poland's Former Aristocracy

A Nobility Gone Middle-Class

By Dusko Doder

WARSAW (WP).—Ignacy Potocki was 65 when he went before a panel of experts at War-Metallurgy to defend his doctoral dissertation. The tall, mild-mannered geologist, whose name is well known in Poland, passed with flying colors. That was in the spring of 1972, when Mr. Potocki was about to retire. He felt he should end his career with

In what seems like another age, hefore World War II, Mr. Potocki was a rich young man about town, interested in the arts and archaeology, a sportsman and world traveler, scion of an aristocratic family that has shaped Poland's history for centuries. It was one of the nation's "historic" families. Its private fortune was immense, as were its landed estates. At one time, the Potockis owned about nine million acres of fertile land and forests. Eighteen towns, countless villages and millions of peasants were on the land.

Swift 'Liquidation'

The "liquidation" was swift. Without their wealth and lands, relegated to the status of secondclass citizens and "enemies of the people," most of the nobles withcrew from prominence with quiet dignity before what seemed to them to be a barbaric tide. Some fled to the West, hut a majority remained in Poland—former princes and counts living in small apartments, ricing streetcars to work. Outwardly, at least, they do not differ from other Polish citizens, except that their children come across their family names in history books.

Mr. Potocki withdrew without a word. But he never signed a document acknowledging the expropriation of his property, since he regarded it as illegal, Starting as a laborer, he managed over the past three decades to carve z. decent place for himself. The Polish Communist government has shown a great deal of tolerance toward its "class enedarkest days of Stalinism, Former aristocrats now are treated more or less like all other citizens. which can be attributed to the self-confidence of the regime, Even older aristocrats admit grudgingly that things have become much better. A few months ago, for the first time since the war, a long essay published in a Warsaw newspaper, Politika, gave a sympathetic and unhiased account of the fate of Poland's historic families. (These family names are protected by law. A Pole can change his name to, say, Rutkowski, hut he cannot assume the name of Potocki or Radziwill).

The Politika article provoked flurry of attacks by conservative elements, but its publication showed a degree of democratize-tion under the government of party leader Edward Gierek. The article concluded that the aristocratic class has been "eliminated" and what remains of it should he regarded "as one of many possible snobberies," or "a respected anachronism." nization. In Hungary, the government is also increasingly criticizing popular attitudes toward manual labor.

The Hungarian state radio recently castigated a speaker at a production meeting at a steel plant, where a fellow worker had been "promoted" to administrative ranks. The broadcast disagreed with the use of the word "promotion," and asked: "Why is it more dignified to do paperwork than to make wheels for cranes?" The hroadcast deplored the fact that a young girl, a high school graduate, had chosen an administrative joh paying less than she would have earned as a textile worker. "Notwithstanding the final considerations, she obviously felt that the prestige value of administration was greater—and it sounds greater," the broadcast

It added: "This sort of simplification can be classified as underestimation of the social status of manual labor as a hierarchy in which the spacious and sunny workshop is always ranked behind the dingy offices with windows on the airshaft, as if it is not possible to lead with oil-covered hands, wearing a blue shirt or overalis."

Despite party rhetoric and living conditions for workers nearly everywhere in Eastern Europe, anything to be more remote. On balance, everyone is getting richer, but some are getting richer

Possible Atomic Theft Worrying AEC

Now the Atomic Energy Comission is thinking seriously of in derling the same precautions nen shipping nuclear materials, t just the finished weapons. The AEC's new plan is prompt by fears that the worldwide outh of atome energy might accompanied by attempts at omic theft, by organized crimiis or terrorists or even by vernments.

Theodore Taylor, a former de mer of nuclear weapons and erent crusader for tighter nuar saleguards, says that a telear blast so small that wespg experts might describe & as "fixels" could kill 100.000 peowatching a football game. e fellout alone from a fizzle at in the open could kill 5.000 re, while the same explosion ; off beneath the twin towers New York's World Trade Conout opple both buildings

Bomb Not the Only Threat

WASHINGTON (WP) - Nuclear thieves would not need an atomic bomb to terrorize society with impossible ransom demands. They might be able to reach the same goals by stealing enough plutonium to make what is called a dispersal Plutonium powder is the most poisonous substance known to man. It can safely be held in the hand, but if breathed in, plutonium would begin to attack the lunes immediately. Death might follow in a matter of hours, depending on how much plutonium was inhaled.

-A dispersal device could be a simple bomb, exploded in the air above a city. Winds would carry plutonium dust for miles, and people might have to stay indoore for days while trained troops wearing gas masks cleaned the streets and

A plutonium disperal bomb exploded without warning in the air might kill hundreds, even thousands, of people. The United States has already had one experience with phytonium dispersed into the air. That came when an atomic bomb fell out of a B-52 near Palomares, in Spain, and broke spert, spilling plutonium around the countryside, but killing nobody. The piutonium was cleaned up at a cost of millions of dollars. .

The United States goes to unusi lengths to prevent the loss of an atomic weapon, but nevertheless it has lost a few. Four fell out of a B-52 bomber over Palomares, Spain, several years ago, and four dropped out of a B-52 over Greenland All eight were found.

A bomb which dropped out of a plane over South Carolina some years ago is still missing. however, presumably lost in a swamp. A Navy fighter-bomber reportedly missed an aircraft cerrier deck once and sank to the bottom of the Pacific, its nuclear bomb aboard. It is still there.

Outside of weapons stockpiles, the United States has more than 40.000 atomic weapons scattered around the world. Most are in the United States, but about 7.000 are in Europe and a smaller number are in the Far East.

Theft of atomic weapons is not the primary concern of responsible officials. There are so many electronic barriers built that thieves might need months to find a way to trigger the bomb.

"They'd probably have to tear the whole thing apart and put it back together again," an ABC official said, "In effect, they would have to rewire the whole mechanism."

The AEC worries less about a bomb being stolen than it does about the nuclear materials used in the making of a bomb. Three metals can be made into a bomb. plutonium and two isotopes of uranium. Ooe is Uranium-223, the other Uranium-235.

Nobody can buy plutonium or uranium on the open market. Plotonium does not even occur in nature: it is a by-product of the fissioning of uranium in nuclear-power plants. Natural uranium cannot be used to make bombs, either. A bomb-maker needs uranium that is at least 90 percent Uranium-235 which is made only in pranium-enrichment plants.

There is a uranium-enrichment plant in Prance, another in England, a third in China, three more in the United States and several in the Soviet Union. A pilot enrichment plant is operating in the Netherlands, producing low-enriched uranium for atomic power plants. Fully enriched uranium also is the fuel for the Navy's 107 nuclear-powered ships and for a new type of power plant called the high-temperature, gas-cooled reactor, which operates et twice the temperatures of ordinary nuclear power plants.

Nobody would want to steal the uranium or plutonium inside, or fresh from a submarina reactor or a nuclar power plant. It is lethally radioactive.

On the other hand, the metal which comes out of an enrichment plant, and which goes into the fabrication plant to be made into fuel elements or which is shipped to the submarine or the power plant before it is installed, is invaluable.

Uranium and plutonium in their pure form are worth more their weight in gold. Uranium is worth about $6,000 a

Just how much uranium and plutonium exist in their pure form in the United States today is a secret, but the figures are large and growing. One estimate is that almost two million pounds of both metals are in storage around the country, and that figure is expected to grow at least to-three million pounds by 1980.

The stored uranium and plutonium are felt to be relatively safe, but long-distance shipments worry security experts. In addition to an unknown number of nuclear-weapon shipmeots across the country, the Chira and Israel.

31, 1974, counted 455 shipments of what it calls "special nuclear materials" by its civilian licensees. Special nuclear malerials are quantities of plutonium and fully enriched uranium that are in excess of what the AEC calls "trigger quantities."

The trigger quantity for plutonium is mo kilograms. trigger quantity for fully enriched uranium is five kilograms, The trigger quantity is not enough to make a bomb-at least four times the trigger quantity is understood to be needed for a bomb, although the exact quantity is secret.

There are 26 plants in the United States licensed to handle and ship plutonium and fully enriched uranium.

The plutonium and uranium go out under armed guard, either in armored cars or in grucks escorted by armed guards in a second car. They follow planned routes, so that, if they are hijacked, rescue the trucks are built so that mer armed with bezookas would still need several hours to break into

While uranium and plutonium on the move are the big worry the ABC, there is still a lot of concern about the same materials disappearing from the factory itself. An armed attack on a factory is unlikely, but a theft from the inside is not so unlikely. The commission "loses" as much 100 pounds of uranium and pounde of plutonium a year. enough to make more than 10

atomic bombs.

In most cases, the loss is due to poor inventory-taking, inaccurate weighing or lost scrap. But each time a shortage turns up. diversion is suspected.

The most celebrated case took place back in the 1960s, at Apollo, Ps. A factory there had just taken an order to process and fabricate 2,200 pounds of fully enriched uranium for a nuclearpowered rocket.

An inventory disclosed a nranium shortage of 207 pounds, enough to make several large bombs. For a while China and Ierael wera under suspicion as the possible thieves, The government closed the plant and began to look for the missing uranium. It found about 12 pounds in the 730 air filters which kept uranium from blowing out of the smokestacks. It found another 14 pounds in a burial pit on a mountain eight miles away. At the end of the search, 143 pounds of uranium were still missing. Diversion was still suspected, so the government interviewed every employee in the plant and every past employee. Its conclusion was that there was 'no evidence" of diversion, but a few people there still suspect

I do not believe that "civilizations" are distinct organisms with a regular life cycle, so that their stages can be predicted like the stages of animal life Theoretically, a civilization is capable of indefinite prolongs. tion or renewal. In fact, if Western civilization has reached its total term, that will not be because its term has always been fixed: It will be because this time its structure is threatened dermined from within, Unquestionably Western civillastion is threatened today. The great technological changes of our time have transformed the nature of political power, and many of the attitudes of the past. which we regard as specifically 'Western," now seem out of date Moreover, the same technological changes, which have made the European countries, with their distinct, competing societies and traditions, which were the motor of civilization in the past, seem auddenly impotent. If the countries of Western Europe are the legitimate and necessary custodians of Western civilization, that civilization is today unquestionably weak: weak materially, hecause they cannot stand up to the power of organized continents; weak morally, because they have lost the self-confidence which they so long enjoyed, In the past European liberalsand "liberalism" has always heen regarded as the essential character of Western civilization-believed in progress. They believed that they possessed the key to the future and therefore that the future was on their side. Now, looking inwards, at the tensions produced by this century, and outwards, at the more powerful and less "liberal" rivals which seem to threaten them, they find It difficult to continue that belief. The future, it seems, must be with the super powers; and although in theory, the euper powers might be the continuators of "Western" civilization as the Roman Empire continued Greek civilization, we cannot safely make any euch assumption. Marxism may be legitimate development of Western thinking, but Leninism is not. In Russia, Marxism has of European hberalism, but now that too seems to have become distorted. In both cases, the old tradition has been transformed by objective circumstances: by a historical change in the character of power. The uniform continental power of America or Russia cannot really continue the freedom of Europe, which was linked to the competing pluralism of Europe, any more than the Roman Empire really continued the cocential quality of Greek civilization, which was linked to the freedom of the Greek etta-

Argument's Answer

The enswer to this argument is clear. It is that since only a ental form of society and government is now viable, Westero Europe must itself assume such a form. After all in resources and population it can rival the continental superpowers. Theoretically there is no reason why it should not term itself into a superpower too. Beonomically this is happening already, at least in some respects. And this very process can be seen as the logical continuation of European history. The last century saw the unification of Italy and Germany—a process favored by the "liberals" of the time. That unification was both economic and political: The minuscule principalities of the 18th century had proved inadequate, and Napoleon had shown the way. Napoleon's French inperialism had been defeated, but after its defeat, other waye were found. In this century, under the pressure of the new industrialism even these united countries have proved inadequate as Hitler showed. But may not the convulsations of the 20th century, now that we have defeated our latest tyrannical unifier, lead naturally to a united Europe which will be the only authentic guarantee of the survival of its own Western form of civilization?

Against this It may be said that a Europe united both politically and economically, though viable as a third (or fourth) superpower, would attain its yiability at a heavy price, for it would itself be a repudiation of typical Western civilization, which is essentially linked to certain forms of government, a certain philosophy. Liberals, who claim to be the only true representatives of the "West," insist that that government and philosophy are liberal. In fact, I do not believe that this is true. There are many nonliberal elements in Western" history, fust as there were

Admittedly, it is a real problem. Inevitably the creation of a single market in Europe will lead to a certain uniformity and to the opportunities of vast and dangerous patronage, which can weaken independent forces. If Europe should ever have a single central government controlling a unified patronage, I should tremble for the survival of the European inheritance. But I can see alternative possibilities. In a federal structure, preserving distinct authorities and separate systems -what De Gaulle called a Europe des pairies—I can see the means of preserving European variety even in European unity. For that variety is not artificial. It has deep historic roots. It is precisely because of their dooth that European rivalries have been so eodemic in the past. Those rivalries are no longer tolerable in their old form; but they can. perhaps, discover a new form. At least it is on such a prospect. not on the naïve belief that there ls a distinct "Western" tradition rants as well as democracles in ancient Greece, Indeed, European "liberalism" is the result of continuous internal differences, end to that extent owes its being to nonliberal forces: The professed liberals, if unchallenged, would have been as illiberal as anyone. The essential quality of European civilization, I believe. is not one particular political or philosophical tradition, but its variety: a variety which has led to struckle and war but has also, by continuous interplay, created continuing tradition which intellectuals have afterward simplified) and prevented such stagnation as periodically overse the other great civibzation of China. These tours, and others of the nuclear submarine base at Brest in Brittany, do not herald a change in French policy toward the NATO integrated command, but they are a step toward great-er trust and eventual coordination with Britain and the United States on targeting. Senior French officers no longer talk of the "ious azimuts" (all-directionall defense policy of President de Gaulle's era, a policy which had French rockets pointed west as well as east.

sistance, so that during the course of underwriting the coupon rate had to be raised a quarter point.

The first floating-rate issue of the year, a $50-million, 10-year offering by the Italian telephone utility, STET, opened at 98-98.75 then dropped to 97-98 after being offered at par. The decline occurred though the initial interest rate was fixed st a relatively high 125 percent in accordance with the floatingrate procedure of setting the interest every six months at 0.75 point above prevailing sixmonth Eurodollar rates.

Theoretically, the STET bonds should not have declined quite so much because banks can finance the bonds at prevailing Eurodollar rates and get a return that is 0.75 point higher.

rise of 51.55 points the biggest weekly gain since at least 1966.

By Richard E. Mooney

NEW YORK, Juge 3 (NYT) .-A headline in Newsday proclaimed last week that London's Barclays Bank was interested in acquiring "a Loog Island Bank."

The bank was the Franklin National Bank, and only a suburban Long Island newspaper would call it a Long Island bank these days. Franklin began on Long Island, and most of its branches are on the island—New York's fastest growing suburban complex. Indeed, it dominates the banking scene there. But it moved its headquarters to a prestigious Manhattan address several years sgo, and it has-or had-moved its corporate self up to No. 20 io the ranking of the largest banks in the country. Theo came Franklin had a sharp setback in profits in the first quarter of this year, when most big city banks were basking in substantial gains. On a Friday in mid-May it announced that it was suspeeding dividend payments to stockholders. And two days later, it admitted that it had suffered millions of dollars of losses in foreign-exchange trading.

Survival at Stake

The very survival of "a Long Island Bank" suddenly became a critical concern for the whole New York financial complex, for the federal authorities who regulate banks and the monetary system and-st least symbolically -for the already nervous financial community of the world at large, not to mention the stockholders and customers of the bank

As recently as last year the collapse of C. Amholt Smith's U.S. National Bank in San Diego was "the largest henk failure in American history " Yet it passed titans in Manhattan take, This conditions in the economy and as the Wells large Bank with hardly a rapple. But those were eather times and another place.

What here the lander issues at Franklin? As a $5-oillion bank, Franklin was important by uself, At this particular moment, however, it also becomes a focus for a number of disturbing questions, some of which extend beyond its particular faults.

Aggressive Expansion

First, Franklin did not grow to be the 20th largest by gradual establishment-type expansion. It was pushe. Relative to its emacity, it took greater risks—in particular, riskier loans—than the same time uurtured a suspect consistion in Wail Street, Thus, despite its big-league size Frankin never has reached the big leagues, and wheo its troubles mushroomed this spring it appears to have been at a loss for friends. Big institutions withdrew funds, and big banks were reluctant to take it over by merger. A second major consideration in the Franklin case is the role of the federal authorities in their various capacities—the Controller of the Currency (as the regulatorsupervisor of national banks; and the Federal Reserve System (as the governor of money and credit out or signt-largely absorbed by sped its expansion but at the the agency that ultimately stands ready to bail out a failing bank :

Another crucial factor in this case was the role of the monetary authorities-or, more broadly, of monetary cooditions at home and abroad. The whole world of finance has been off balance for the better part of the last two years, trying to cope with extreme inflation, soaring interest rates, plunging stock markets and floating currencies. It has been the sort of stmosphere that kills off businesses, even big ones, if their footing is not sound. Franklin's first public an-nouncement of trouble was only that it had lost money-albeit as much as $40 million-in the currency markets. It hlamed an errant trader in its foreign-exchange department. But some of the sturdier giants in the ranking business have taken surprisingly large losses this year on their bond portfolios too. Conditions are ripe for upsets.

Enters now the Federal Reserve in its direct responsibility for the soundness of the U.S. banking system. The Fed has been involved in the Franklin case at least since the bank reached its crisis stage a month ago. It decided then, along with the controller, to try to keep the bank going—to sustain it with loans during the crisis spell, in hopes that when the bank's internal

Robert Fabian, executive vicepresident of the bank and its general counsel, called the settle-ment "a breakthrough for women" and said it would affect personnel throughout the banking in-

Banks, he pointed out, are among the largest employers in the paton of women (73 percent of the Bank of America's 54,000 employees are women) but they still have less than 1 percent women officers in top management.

The settlement here will bring an estimated $10 million a year in additional salaries for women at the Bank of America and increase the overall proportion of women officers in the bank to 40 percent by the end of 1978. 5 percent of them at the top of management.

Unusual Aspect

The most unusual aspect of the settlement, however, and the feature that experts have characterized as "unprecedented." is that the bank has agreed to establish a $3.75 million trust fund exclusively for women employees. This will be used for training education, travel, sabbatical leaves and other development" programs.

"T've never heard anything like it." said Harriet Raab, assistant dean of Columbia University Law School and an expert on women's rights. She said the case would surely have an effect on the settlement of other discrimination cases. Although the amount is not unusually high by American philanthropic standards, it was called a landmark by scholars who specialize in West European studies. Their field suffered somewhat in recent years as the focus of American political and scholarly interest shifted to Asia.

Half the income from the gift. which was announced yesterday by Harvard, is to be used to establish a new chair in European studies for a senior professor. The rest will support seven or eight graduate students, for whom fellowship money had become scarce in recent years.

The Krupp donation is the Tatest in a series of contributions from foreign sources to American

There is sufficient information to indicate that the Federal Reserve has also been fostering conversations that might lead to merger with another bank or to a division of parts among several banks.

Fear for Others

The Federal Reserve had an interest in preventing collapse at = least because of a fear that nthers -perhaps many others-might also fall in an ensuing panic. As soon as Franklin came to public attention, rumors began to surface about four or five other banks that were also said to be in shaky condition.

The final lronic consideration in this affair is the foreign inrolvement. Franklin's largest stockholder is Michele Sidona, a Milan financier who is relatively nnknown to the authorities here or to the American banking cnmmunity. Naturally, a little extra nervousness arises when there is a foreign owner. It happens with all absentee landlords, including American companies abroad.

The Franklin story started with one small office in Franklin Center, Long Island. It ended up on a much larger stage.

Amin Withdraws Threat to Deport British in Uganda

KAMPALA, Uganda, June 9 (UPI).—Presidant Idi Amin Friwithdrew his threat to throw all British citizens out of Uganda only hours before the expulsion deadline and said he was giving them "one last chance." Gen, Amin announced his decision after a lengthy meeting with acting British Ambassador

John Hennessey. But the general warned that the reprieve was only temporary and said that "I will blow every-thing up again" if the British Broadcasting Corp. persisted in spreading whet he called false propaganda about the country. Yesterday, he had threatened to expel all the estimated 1,000 Britons still living here and close down the embassy because of the widespread coverage the BBC gave to a report by the International Commission of Jurists located in Switzerland. The group accused Gen. Amin of being responsible for the deaths of tens of thousands of Ugandans.

"I am not taking any drastic action against the British at this time because of the advice of [Kenya's] President Jomo Kenyatta." Gen. Amin said in a statement on Uganda radio,

UCLA Streak Is Broken

By Neil Amdur

AUSTIN, Texas, June 9 (NYT). This was definitely not UCLA's year in athletics.

The Bruins, who saw their basketball dominance snapped earlier this year, had their threeyear reign as track and field kings ended by Tennessee yesterday in a dramatic windup to the National Collegiate Athletic Association outdoor championships.

The closely contested team competition, for once, overshadowed other aspects of this threeday meet, although several impressive individual performances enterged from stifling heat and humidity at Memorial Stadium.

These included a wind-aided time of 19.9 seconds in the 220pard-dash final by James Gilkes of Fisk College (Tenn.), a 440jurd dash title by Larance Jones. the loth-round draft choice of the New York Giants, a jareliu success by Jim Judd of Oregon State, and the triumphant return of Bruce Collins, Pennsylvania's listermediate hurdler.

The mile, which had been expected to grah the spotlight with Tony Waldrop in the race, was won by Paul Cummings of Brigham Young, who led from the first lap. The time was the slowest in seven years, 4 minules

1.1 seconds. Walricop, a runner-up last year who had nine consecutive sub-4minute miles this season, suffered his second straight setback to Cummings with a third-place finish (4:02.3) hehind Wilson Waigwa, a Kenyan who attends

Tezas El Paso. "I just didn't have the strength of zip that I had earlier in the year," the North Carolina senior said, refusing to use the 89-degree temperatures, 66 percent humidity and 20-mile-an-hour

headwinds as alibis. "I dldn't feel as strong as I wanted, and I think I'm going to have to go back and re-evaluate thiogs.

If the failure to break 4 minutes was a surprise to many in the crowd of 12500. Gilkes's sudden explosion to the tape stunned Reggie Jones of Tennessee, wbn took the 100-yard dash Friday night. Gilkes, who is from Guyana, was handtimed in 19.9 seconds, equaling the fastest wind-aided time in the evect. The wind was clocked at 17.4 miles an hour so the 19.9 won't be recognized. Tommie Smith has the record at 20 seconds.

Tennessee finished with 60 points, to 56 for the University of California, Los Angeles.

After the Vols had moved into the lead with a first and secondplace sweep in the steeplechase by Doug Brown and Ron Addison, and with a hig finish by Willie Thomas in a 1:48.7 half-mile. UCLA stormed back into contention by upsetting North Carolina Central for its fifth straight mile relay crown,

The mile relay traditionally ends most meets, but the triple jump competition was still on when the Bruins' Maxie Parks passed Larry Black of NCC and Charlie Josef of Seton Hall no the anchor leg of the mile relay.

UCLA's hopes for a team title soared when Clarence Taylor moved into second place in the triple jump early in the competition. He was still in third place, which would have given the Bruins a share of the title, as late as the fifth round before Ken McBryde of Manhattan and Charleton Ehizuelan of Illinois gor off successive 54-foot immos. The jumps, 54-1 1.2 by Mc-Bryde and 54-8 hy Ehizuelan, pushed Taylor to fifth place and MILAN, July 9 (AP).—Eddy Merckx of Belgium won the cycling Tour of Italy and becama the first non-Italian to take it five times.

The last leg in the Italian classic went to Italy's Marinn Basso, who outpedaled Belgium'a Roger de Vlaeminck in the fastpaced 257-kilometer run on flat ground from Bassano del Granua

With the fifth victory, Merckx equaled the record of the two cyclists rated as Italy's best ever. Alfredo Binda and Fausto Coppl. José Manuel Puente of Spain tried repeatedly to break loose from the pack in the final leg hut the Belgian kept with the Spaniard until Fuente gave up. Fuente wore the leader's pink jersey from the fourth to tha 14th leg in the 22-leg Giro, hut lost it to the Belgian on the Italian Riviera May 31.

Italy's Giamhattista Baronchelli, 20-year-old newcomer to the Giro, placed second in the overall standings, 12 seconds behind Merckx. Felice Gimondi, now Italy's top cyclist, was third, 33 seconds behind.

MAMA DOESN'T LIVE HERE ANYMORE By Judy Sullivan. Arthur Fields Books. 243 pp. $6.95.

MEN have been walking out on child going to a public set their families for centuries. You might say it started with the Crusades. Now that women have a crusade, they are starting to walk out too. At least that's what Judy Sullivan says in "Mama Doesn't Live Here Anymore." Her husband was a successful profes-sor, on his way to becoming a deen or president of a college. Judy Sullivan taught art, and generally left her husband and 11-year-old daughter in the summers to study or work on projects in other cities. She loved them both, she insists, but after 14 years she couldn't live with them anymore. "I can't take care of anyone else," was the way sha expressed it, when she announced that she was leaving, not for the summer, but for good.

Married life and motherhood used up too much of her energy and she needed it for other things. things that were so important to her that she based her very identity on them. She wanted to get a doctorate from a good school, write a book on black art, participate in the women's liberation movement-but, above all, she wanted to "have full responsibili-ty for my own life." As far as I can see from her account, her husband was almost pathologically open to suggestion—yet she never tried to discuss her problems with him. She took karate lessons instead.

My first reaction to "Mama Doesn't Live Here Anymore" was sympathetic. This was not feminist theory, but actual fact. Here was a document that might show us what it feels like to lose yourself in others. Here was a step-by-step progression from selfsacrificing wife and mother to self-affirming woman. This was someone who acted on what she felt, who went through a personal "revolution." Other women she knew were drugging themselves with drink, tears, self-pity, recrimination, affairs and even insanity, because, like her, they'd felt that the monotony of their lives was "permanent." that they "knew what was going to happen the next day, and the next, forever and ever, amen." Under the umbrella of "honesty" and "to thine own self be true," Judy Sullivan left her husband and dar 'tter and moved to New York

When François Andre Dan-ican Philidor (1726-1795) offered his famous dictum, "The pawn is the soul of the game," he could fairly predict that his contemporaries would not heed it. In those early days of the modern game, the mainstream was better expressed by Alexan-der Louis Deschapelles, who said, "I do not want to capture, to defend, or to attack. I want to checkmate, and that's all."

However, if Philidor were around now, he would soon realize what a prophet he had been, for the chief trend in the last 20 years has been to build the game on the basis of pawn structure and its exploitation. The younger generation grandmasters, in particular, have fastened on the remarkable techniques for attacking doubled pawns and isolated pawns that Bobby Fischer has displayed in so many games. -Small Consolation

Indeed, they may be carrying things too far, neglecting what lay beneath Deschapelles'e crude braggadocio. There are positions in which the firepower of the pieces overwhelmingly outweighs the disadvantage of a broken pawn formation; in these, there is no satisfaction for the side with the superior pawn structure in knowing he pawn structure in knowing he might inherit a winning endgame if he cannot survive a smashing piece attack in the middle game.

Kissinger wanted to avoid a repetition of this botch by designting tine nev camel all by himseif, but he ran into a snag at the White House. The Kissinger design called for replacing the cemel's long. drooping neck with a more rigid, upright neck similar to the giraffe's so that the camel would be able to get e better view of what was coming over the next sand dune. The White House, however, was unhappy with this. President Nixon is concerned about keeping favor with Southern senators whose votes he may need to avoid conviction on a hill of impeachment. For this reason he wanted the redesigned camel to reflect bis love for the

And so Gen. Haig, the President's assistant, told Kissinger to build an elligator enout onto the new camel.

Kissinger agreed, but under tests at the Pentagon the graffs neck broke down after less than 80 hours of supporting the massive alligator jaw and left the snout dragging in the sand. which ground down the alligator teeth and damaged the gums.

The final compromise was suggested by the State Department, acting on its basic operating principle, "When in doubt, do nothing." This called for doing away with the neck and snout altogether and, in their place, to keep the South happy, attaching

The Pentagon objected that this would give the camel a tail at both ends, which would make

Alexander's Fête

ATHENS, June 9 (AP), - The Greek government announced that in 1977 it will celebrate "throughout the land and with international participation the 3,300th anniversary of the death of Alexander the Great.

MASSINGTON.—As part of its it militarily hard to cope with new friendship with the because it would be difficult to Arabs, the United States has tell whether the camel was retreating or advancing.

At this point Kissinger produced one of his ingenious solutions, and redesigned the camel so it would move sideways.

The Department of Transportation objected, however, that with the camel's hump and flanks moving sideways into the wind, the creature was aerodynamically unsound and would be blown backward in high desert

Its solution was to remove the hump and take off the camel's legs, so it would lie close to the desert floor, thus reducing wind resistance.

Kissinger objected strongly. A camel without legs was useless, he said. "If you made the possum tail stronger," the President suggest-"you would have e camel that could swing by its tail through the palm trees." "But there eren't enough palm trees to make tree-swinging a viable means of locomotion," said Kissinger.

The Agriculture Department said it could plant palm trees along the major camel routes. "That still doesn't solve the problem of hump," said Kis-singer. "If we remove the hump, as the Department of Transportation proposes, we will have a with no hump, and a camel with no hump can hardly be called a camel at all."

"What we could do," said the Army, "13 take a lot of horses and put a hump on each horse's back and have the horses move slong the paim-lined camel routes so every camel would have his hump moving right along under him.

Kissinger said the murden of carrying humps would put a terrible etrain on the borses' neck muscles, but the Arony said that was easily solved by replacing the borses' necks with the discarded camel necks that had to be removed anyhow to make room for the possum tails.

"And it will be a shot in the arm for employment" said the Labor Department, "with a whole new industry springing up to mount humps and camel necks on borses."

"That's government with a purpose," said the President, 'Henry, get cracking."

Center for Study of Democratic Institutions-in Crisis?

By Israel Shenker

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. O (NYT). - The Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions cherisbes many ideals, including one that may be indispensable: Robert Hutchins. Fifteen years after he founded the center and became its leader, he ceded his office June 1 to Malcolm Moos, for the past seven years president of the University of Minnesota, Hutchins, 75, will stay un as the center's life senior fellow. The center's gospel is to "clarify the basic issues and widen the circle of discussion about them." Its philosophy is liberal and its substance patrician: A 42-acre sylvan retreat whose central building. known as El Parthenon, bouses a jamboree of full-time scholars, eometime authors, onetime journalists, occasional iconoclasts and perennial academics. Their mission is to think deeply and speak loudly, scorning no human problem as too difficult, evading no issue as too divisive.

The issue of the center's survival is overriding trifles of rootine concern such as global law and peaceful order. While seeking immortality, the center is running oot of money, and intimations of mortality contend with the hope that something may turn up.

Marking Time

"Institutional Micawberisin." Harvey Wheeler, a senior fel-low, called it, and Harry Ashmore, another senior fellow, scored it as "a constant tambourine-shaking operation." For the past several years Hutchins has been suffering from ill health and he has had several operations. John Wilkinson, a senior fellow, complained that the center "has meaowhile marked time." "We've been drifting," long periods, and found a focus and locus outside the center. How could people think when they were above a cloud? They thought about meeting, they didn't think about thinking." Moos would like the center to be "something like a Rockefeller University for the Humanities"—with some postdoctoral students and "a few high-prestige name chairs." He plans to launch a fund drive and prove that the center is not merely the lengthened shadow of its founder. "It's Hutchins's center," said Wheeler. "It's a bureaucrati-sation of Hutchins, an extension of his personality—and he's a strong and compelling person with a piercing mind and an alarming ability to see behind social facades. He's a master of shaft and foe of staggering charisma, and Moos will simply have to shake the tambourine harder. "Moos might get charisma if he gets money," suggested Wilkinson.

Shift of Titles

In a shift of titles, Moos will be president, leaving the honprific title of chairman to Jubal Parten, an 82-year-old Texas oil millionaire. Hutchins was the son of a Presbyterian minister, and he recalls his father's principle as being. "It you like it, it's At 30 he became president of the University of Chicago, and in stages Calvinistically rigorous and imperceptible, he grew from boy wonder to man wonder, scorning conventional wis-dom, confling controversy. Said John Cogley, a senior fellow: "He was never out of the establishment while criticizing the hell out of it."

There sre 11 senior fellows who, not otherwise or eisewhere engaged meet ritually at 11 am. for "the dialogue"-a 90-minute session round R hollow square, with microphones and tape recorders off stage indiscriminately rounding up

Rexford Tugwell, who was a New Deal braintruster, is working on the 40th draft of his new Constitution for the United States, with small likelihood that his creation will ever become the law of the land. Alex Comfort is the center's meticulously organized British expert on aging, physical con-stitutions and sexual institutions, the author of "Joy of Sex" and of the forthcoming "More Joy." He is also the center's anarchist. He says approvingly of his colleagues: "They follow the good anarchist tradition of holding all their political meetings in individual telephone booths."

Visiting Fellows

Alva Myrdal, former Swedish minister for disarmament, and ber husband Gunnar Myrdal, another expert un man's inhumanity to man, are also visiting fellows.

was supposed to be," she said, "bot I think the center is in a period of transition, seeking its true role. The atmosphere is very congenial. but the subjects of conversation are spread quite thinly, so there's a diffusion of energies."

"It's not my method," said her husband of the dialogue. Tve always learned more from individual talks, not from conferences." "When a meeting is good you can call it dialogue, when it's had you can call it lousy," said Norton Ginsburg, who is not only a senior fellow but also dean, which means he is supposed to see that work gets
